ACM2Y: Advancing Computing Education in Associate-Degree Programs

Laura Helena Malave

Organization(s): St. Petersburg College, United States of America

Established in 2021, ACM2Y is an ACM group for those interested in computing education in two-year higher education programs, such as associate-degree programs. Supported by the ACM Education Board, ACM2Y is governed by an 11-member executive committee and has the following mission: ACM2Y advocates for a diverse group of computing students and educators by building a targeted and resourceful community for faculty of two-year, higher education programs.

Membership in ACM2Y is free, and benefits include a community listserv for conversations among members, and periodic webinars on topics of interest to the community. As ACM2Y continues to grow, additional activities will be added. As of Summer 2024, ACM2Y has about 300 members. Find the website at acm2y.acm.org.